

COURSE DESCRIPTION

This seminar will focus upon a number of topics at the forefront of mathematical research addressing issues in the life sciences. The mathematical topics will emphasize algebraic and analytical issues arising in modeling chemical reaction networks with applications to a variety of biological and medical problems such as: inflammatory processes, cardiovascular disease (genesis, progression, reversal), cancer (development, progression, treatment), circadian rhythms and possibly others as time permits.